Cordially invites you to a lecture on

The Routes to Food Security: Strategies and Challenges to Survival (Bangladesh and India)

Dr. Taneesha Mohan

Department of Geography, University of Colorado Boulder, USA

Taneesha Mohan is a critical development geographer. She has extensively worked on gender, labour, migration, refugees, agrarian political economy and social justice in the context of South Asia. Her current research looks at the growing vulnerability and gender inequality in global supply chains primarily with foods. The research is a comparative study of India and Bangladesh's shrimp industry, which highlights how the current labour market regime is generating precarious lives and a growing invisible labour force.
